

Céline Kohlprath has long standing experience in managing multi-stakeholder projects and in strategic planning in emergency situations, gained during her assignments for the United Nations and the Swiss government. As a former journalist, she has specialized in advocacy work and institutional communications throughout her career. Her expertise and interests lie in the areas of migration, humanitarian aid, development cooperation and sustainable development.

Céline Kohlprath has spent a large part of her career abroad, in West Africa, Central America and Southeast Asia. She has a very strong network among Swiss political institutions, the federal administration and IOs/NGOs. In 2006, she obtained her M.A. at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, followed by various specializations, including in project management and public relations.

Céline Kohlprath is a mother of two children and commutes between Lausanne and Zurich.
